Doctoral Audiology students coated

As about 150 family and faculty members looked on, twenty-two first and second-year Doctor of Audiology students were given their white coats at a special ceremony recently.

The Audiology Foundation of America generously provided the white coats for our students.

In our School of Allied Health Professions as in our other schools, the white coat represents a visible symbol of the transition from the classroom to clinical patient care.

Congratulations!

Nursing students give back

Twenty of our students who are members of the Student Nurses' Association, along with nursing faculty, participated in a Habitat for Humanity Build the weekend before Thanksgiving.

The LSUHSC nursing team helped install insulation in homes. They also did some landscaping, installing sod at a number of newly built homes in the Harvey area.

Habitat for Humanity is a nonprofit organization that builds homes for disadvantaged families. Habitat supervisors direct the work of volunteers like ours.

The students deemed the event a huge success and say they had a great time giving back to our community.

Who Dat!

As interest in the New Orleans Saints builds to a fever pitch approaching the playoffs, the Who Dat Nation is alive and well at the Health Sciences Center. So are members of the Saints organization, thanks to two LSUHSC faculty members.

Dr. Charles Brown, Professor of Public Health, served as the Saints' team physician from 1968 until 2000, when Dr. John Amoss, Assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine, succeeded him. Look for Dr. Amoss on the sidelines.

It's another example of our community involvement and one more reason to support the home team. Geaux Saints!
